

Why the masses cannot see the conspiracy

Introduction

More and more people are becoming aware that there is a supranational controlling cabal determining the course of nations according to an overarching plan that is decades or even centuries in the making. Many have become aware that globalists are controlling nations since the Covid crisis. However, the fact is that the vast majority of society still considers such things as conspiracy theories to be ridiculed.

This poses the question: why is this the case? This paper seeks to answer this question.

Many people are just stupid

This is just an observable fact. To test this, just drive around any major town to see how many people drive in a stupid fashion. As Frank Zappa once said, 'Stupidity is more ubiquitous than hydrogen in the universe'. The sheer level of stupidity manifested day after day is surprising and shocking.

So even when faced with irrefutable evidence that certain establishment / government narratives are plainly wrong and dangerous, they simply continue to trust in a benevolent executive. This trust has led many to their deaths and maiming from trusting in the Covid vaccine safety despite proof from the beginning that it is harmful.

Sadly, this cohort will never be convinced as to the truth of incipient totalitarian control until it's too late.

Many people are too scared

This is a fear of the truth. Many people have been so frightened by deliberate governmental behavioural psychology to induce fear that they cannot begin to face the truth. They understand that if they start to peel off the layers of the onion they will discover more and more terrifying facts that they cannot cope with.

Most people are brainwashed to accept government propaganda

This conditioning begins at a very early age in schools, continues through further education and then via the media. This teaches them to fully accept whatever authority figures tell them without any questioning. Critical thinking has been eradicated amongst swathes of the population from Millennials onward. Other people are just too distracted from having time to subject narratives to investigation.

People like to be comfortable and not disturbed

Life is hard and there are many problems to overcome. As a result, most people do not wish the further encumbrance of even bigger problems in society. After working hard, they seek to obtain as comfortable a life as possible within their constraints. Researching the truth about social narratives is outside their comfort zone.

Extremists have put them off

Unfortunately there are many radical, genuine conspiracy theorists whose life is focused upon the margins of wild opinions: affirming a flat earth or reptilian shape-shifters in power, claiming that dinosaurs never existed, averring that extraterrestrial aliens are in control, etc. These have besmirched those holding genuine beliefs about actual conspiracies in play.

An overweening respect for authority

Some people, particularly older folk, tend to have far too much respect for the government and establishment officials. The idea that these people in authority could be deliberately harming us is simply impossible for them to consider. Therefore, for such folk, the police are all decent; the judges dispense absolute impartial justice; the royal family is ethical; the government is beneficent; the secret services are protecting us; the magistracy is pure; the NHS would never sanction harmful drugs and so on. Of course, all these claims are false and this can be proven from blatant facts and not conspiratorial theories.

Nevertheless, large swathes of the population still maintain that those in authority are true, moral, decent, effective and honourable.

Fear of looking stupid to their peers

Since most people deny that there is a real conspiracy threatening everyone, most people simply do not want to look foolish to their friends and work colleagues. They fear being branded a dissident or a conspiracy theorist. Most people do not want to stand out from the crowd and so they comply.

Intellectual imperiousness

This is a branch of pride. Some people seek to appear intellectual and so treat the claims of 'conspiracy theorists' as beneath them. They use sophistry to deny these claims without looking deeply into the facts behind them. The fact is that these folk simply have not invested the time to properly investigate the claims of a gigantic conspiracy; they have not done their homework. Therefore, they use convoluted arguments to dismiss the conspiracy despite understanding little about it.

So much and no more

Some have travelled a little way into the conspiracy plan. For example, the sheer weight of evidence demonstrates that the Covid crisis was fake, that the lockdowns were wrong, that restrictions had no basis and that the vaccines are dangerous. But this is all they can handle. They cannot go further into researching that the Covid crisis was planned for decades and the vaccines were being developed years before or that Coronavirus patents had existed for 20 years.

The incompetence argument

Many dismiss the idea of a global conspiracy citing that it would require far too much planning and control and this would fail due to human incompetence ('Murphy's Law'). Others extend this into the area of governmental incompetence and political expediency rather than following a developed agenda.

So the social disasters all around us, occurring in unison in every nation on Earth, at the same time, in the same way, with the same stock phrases, is all human incompetence.

It's all an accident

This is associated with the former example. These folk claim that all the bad policies and practices are accidental. The politicians meant well but things went wrong by accident.

This fallacy is easily dismissed. There are simply far too many associated events and policies that resulted in societal harm for them all to be accidental. Was the development of fiat currency and a debt-based economy an accident? Was the fractional reserve system of banks an accident? Was giving everyone a Covid vaccine where the trials demonstrated that it was already dangerous and harmful an accident? Was dismissing years of proven pandemic protocols in favour of experimental, untested measures that contravened epidemiological knowledge an accident? We could go on at length.

Scapegoating

One simplistic measure is to blame everything going wrong on to some suitable enemy, usually Putin and Russia. This is to distract people from understanding that the real enemy is your own government and the people controlling them. Thus food shortages are Putin's fault. Inflation is Putin's fault. Expensive salmon is Putin's fault. The energy crisis is Putin's fault and so on.

What is absolutely true

This is what is being denied by those who will not or cannot see the conspiracy. These are incontrovertible facts.

- There is a long-term plan to control all of the world population. Multiple documents prove this such as: the Rockefeller Brother's Fund proposals in 1956; the Club of Rome's plans in 1972; the UN's Agenda 2030; the WEF's Great Reset, multiple quotes regarding depopulation by VIPs, etc.

- This plan could be described as Marxist (Socialist), totalitarian, collectivist, corporatist or fascist.
- It seeks to gain control over every aspect of society; particularly Western society.
- It sought, and succeeded, in infiltrating every institution in Western society (this includes Australia, Japan, several southern Asian nations and New Zealand).
- The originators are anti-Christian and Luciferian (with various sub-groups; e.g. Jesuits, Freemasons, Talmudists etc.).
- They seek to eradicate every Christian principle in Western society.
- They seek to destroy the traditional family unit.
- They seek to destroy nation states and replace them with a homogenised (mongrel) federal superstate. See the Kalergi plan.
- They seek to reduce the world population by 95%.
- They seek to enslave the rest of the global population as serfs in a neo-feudal system dominated by technocracy.
- They seek to eject populations from rural areas and concentrate them into megalopolis cities where they are restricted to certain zones. See Agenda 2030.

All these items are established in the Elite's own published works, seminars, videos, quotations and conferences. There is no doubt about it; their plans are laid out in the open for those who wish to find them.

Examples

Deniers of a global conspiracy affirm that there cannot be a secret, hidden cabal ruling over nations. That there are no high-level establishment paedophile groups abusing and killing children. That current events were not planned decades ago and manipulated by people in power. And so on.

Jimmy Savile

An example of an Elite person abusing power for decades in secrecy is Jimmy Savile.

Savile was known as a 'kiddie-fiddler' in the mid-1950s in Leeds. Many contemporaries claimed that he would either end up in prison or be successful due to his connections. His proclivities were widely known; certainly many in the BBC knew that he was an abuser and would not work with him, such as Terry Wogan. The claim that no one in the BBC knew about him is a lie. He was protected by those in power.

His Elite connections were significant. He was a close friend and mentor of Prince Charles and dined with him. Charles turned to him for advice during the problems in his marriage to Diana. He was a friend of Margaret Thatcher and dined with her at several New Year dinners. He was a friend of Prince Phillip. He had connections to the IRA and claimed he could get them to assassinate people for him. He had connections to the secret services. He was closely connected to the chief constables of more than one police force. He had connections to leaders in the NHS who ensured he had the key to a children's hospital where he abused kids. He even had his own quarters in some institutions. He had close connections to political leaders; especially Edward Heath. It is alleged by a barrister¹ that he procured children for Heath from care homes, who then abused them and even murdered them on his yacht, dumping the bodies in the sea with the full complicity of the secret service security.

Multiple people exposed him as a sexual abuser of children; yet he never sued them. Some people, such as David Icke, even wrote books about it. Claims abounded about the wickedness of Savile in journals, pamphlets and later on the Internet. Some victims went to the police and tried to get Savile investigated, but high-level officers closed the cases down.

So many people knew about Savile and accused him of misdeeds, but this was dismissed as a conspiracy theory. Meanwhile the BBC gave him a prime-time programme working with kids (Jim'll fix it). This sad affair continued for decades. When Louis Theroux spent time with him and broadcast a programme about him, during which Savile openly admitted to kidnapping and binding a teenager to a chair in a basement for a whole night – no one did anything about it. In fact Savile once boasted that no one could touch him as he knew where the bodies were buried and that he had very important powerful friends.

It was only when he died and a brave woman came forward expelling how Savile abused her as a child that the dam broke and hundreds more followed suit. No one will know how many people he abused but the figure is admitted to be over 800 known cases.

So this predator continued his abuse of vulnerable people for decades and the ignorant majority of the population either loved him or tolerated him as an eccentric fundraiser for charity. The voices of the minority who claimed that he was evil were dismissed as conspiracy theories.

The conspiracy theorists were correct; the vast majority of the nation was wrong. The powerful VIP protectors of Savile were liars and fools.

Covid

Another example was the Covid crisis and all that it entailed. Everything stated by the conspiracy theorists was correct; everything claimed by the government was wrong. This includes: there was no pandemic, proved by actuaries. The lab-leak theory was correct. Covid was not a serious disease at all but was flu. Government statistics were lies. Government warnings were behavioural psychology manipulation. Facemasks are useless but also very harmful. The PCR tests don't work to diagnose so-called Covid-19. Social distancing is useless to combat a virus. The vaccines were neither safe nor effective; millions have died or been maimed as a result. Lockdowns were stupid and have caused immense, long-lasting damage to people (especially children), small businesses, education, the economy, and did cause massive inflation.

Pearl Harbour

For decades 'conspiracy theorists' claimed that FD Roosevelt knew of the approaching Japanese warplanes and fleet but deliberately did nothing to stop them, sacrificing Pearl Harbour in order to get America into the war he had promised the nation he would not enter. Multiple documents (such as released intelligence transmissions) now prove that this is exactly what happened. The 'conspiracy theorists' were right; the vast majority of people and also historians were wrong.

The Moon landings

Again conspiracy theorists claimed that America never got any men to the moon for a wide variety of reasons. The chief reason is the extreme radiation of the Van Allen Belts; no human being can pass through these and survive. It is impossible. This alone proves that not one has ever gone into high-level orbit or into space.

Not long ago NASA confirmed this by accident. A video promoting a rocket mission containing a manikin explained that the Van Allen Belts constitute a severe problem that no one has yet found an answer to. This was why a manikin had to be used not a human.

Over and over again conspiracy theorists have been proved correct but were denounced until the information eventually came out.

Conclusion

The example of 1930s Germany is ever before us. The German masses refused to see that they were being manipulated by a fascist hegemony. Indeed, for years they celebrated this domination with adulation for Hitler and willing conscription into youth military units and the army. Only a small minority understood what was happening and tried to resist it.

Now this was not a dull population. Germany was an advanced civilisation that was at the forefront of the arts, architecture, science, technology and academic excellence. These were intelligent and refined people. Yet this intellect did not spare them from accepting a totalitarian regime that committed heinous crimes against humanity. Intelligence is not an antidote to deception; one needs wisdom as well as intellect, discernment not just observation, plus an individualistic enquiring mind not social compliance.

Today Western populations are in exactly the same boat. Despite many social advantages people have a blind spot when it comes to understanding what is really going on around them. This is because they have been conditioned since birth by one institution after another, starting with the education system. Most people are utterly deceived and it is usually those that consider themselves intellectual that are the most deceived. Deception is no respecter of persons.

The German population was ravaged at the end of WWII and suffered immense harm to a degree that is rarely understood. Those that lived in the eastern portion suffered the worst at the hands of the Russian conscripted forces (not the military elite units that were honourable). Millions of women and children were brutally treated. There were mass rapes and horrific tortures. Millions died or were forced to flee in abject conditions. You can see a film of starving, emaciated Germans sat on a pavement begging for food only to be run over by a large truck which deliberately swerved to crush them.

Even in the western portion hundreds of thousands of Germans were bombed, blasted, shot, raped, tortured, hung and worse. Cities were reduced to rubble. RAF incendiary bombs created cauldrons in large cities like Dresden that melted people into fluid on the floor of basements or merged people with the tarmac on roads. Some were just evaporated by the intense heat. Ancestral homes were destroyed and family heirlooms looted. Beautiful medieval towns were reduced to rubble. Six million military personnel and civilians were captured and sent into the USSR to be enslaved and killed. One and a half million were imprisoned by Eisenhower in fields with no housing and virtually no food. People drank from muddy puddles. Most of them died.

The German people suffered terribly and no one cared. No one made films about this suffering or wrote books about how bad a deal the ordinary German people received. While the suffering of certain people gets publicised every day since the war, almost nobody knows anything about the suffering of the German people at the end of the war.

The refusal of the German people to understand what was really going on led to terrible consequences in time. This will be the same today. Those who refuse to understand what the global Elite is doing will end up either dead or enslaved in appalling conditions. These people don't even know that their government is already proposing to eradicate meat from their diet, feed them insects, lock them down permanently in 15-minute zones in road-blocked towns, stop them purchasing more than three new items of clothing a year, eradicate cheap central heating, stop them having a gas cooker, terminate their petrol car and so on. Yet still they don't wake up.

One day they will wake up; but like the Germans in the 1930s, it will be too late.
